Florida is a No-Fault State with a Qualitative Threshold

Florida is a no-fault state in which all passenger vehicle owners are required to have personal injury protection (PIP) insurance. No Fault or PIP provides for payment of 80% of medical bills and/or 60% of wage loss up to a maximum total of $10,000. Additionally, under recent changes, if approved treatment is not received within 14 days, medical coverage may be limited to $2,500. The law pertains to all vehicles with four or more wheels that are registered in the state.

No-fault insurance is designed to limit the number of lawsuits that might be brought and to help keep insurance rates low. However, because Florida is a no-fault qualitative threshold state, if you have been injured in a major manner in a vehicle accident, you are allowed to sue and recover for damages that you have suffered.

Help For West Palm Beach Car Accident Injury Victims

The Law Team of Fetterman & Associates offers aggressive legal representation for car accident victims who have suffered serious injuries. If you're in a serious car accident and suffer serious auto accident injury, you are permitted to sue the negligent party in the State of Florida. Those who do suffer from such injuries are exempt from the limitations of Florida's no-fault law, as the state has a qualitative threshold, which means that one can sue for damages if they reach a certain point.

If you have been in a auto accident and have suffered an injury involving extensive treatment and that has caused permanent, disfiguring, or disabling injuries, then you may sue.
